Interesting Incidents in the Creek Reservation of the Benetiful Indian Terricory.

How the Full-Bloods Jaurt-Tire Schools-Helle Star and Her End, Bold Band-Other Notes.

Epecial Correspondence of the Gasette EUFAULA, I. T., May 20.—Snugly nestled at the foot of Bald mountain, one of a seccession of heavily-timbered hills in the enatern portion of the Creek nation, is situated the small but interesting and decidedly picturesque Indian village of Eufania, fondled on either side by the usually placid but sometimes violent waters of the Canadien, the northern and southern branches of which unite at a point four miles to the east, there continue as a whole for twenty miles in the same direction, where it then intermingles with the turoid waters of the Arkensas, thus terminating its weary course from the far-distant Rockier, its source.

Elofaula, like all villages of the Indian Territory, and owing to the peculiar social position of its people and relations to the United States government as to lands, has not progressed as rapidly as most towns or villages of the same age in the states surrounding the territory in which she is situated, and of course equal progress was not to be expected. Still it must be admitted by the most careless observer that the advancements made by our dusky brethren in the ways of education and of civilization gener-ally, have been rapid during the past few Enfauls was a population of about 300, composed mainly of Creeks and half-breeds, many of whom are well educated, the balance consisting of a sprinkling of Quite a large porwhites and negroes. Quite a tion of the citizens of rounding country make this place their oase of supplies. There are at present three large stores for general merchandise, one owned and conducted by J. M. Perryman, who is at present the chief of the Creeks; two drug stores, a barber shop, four black-smith shops, a public school, three churches and three hotels, the largest of which, the Forest house, is located in the midst of a beautiful grove about an eighth of a mile from the depot, and kept by Mr. John lagram, a well-educated half-breed Creek.

The accommodations are superior to what are usually found in this wild country, and this is a most delightful summering place, with the special attraction of two exceedingly pretty Indian misses, daughters of the proprietor, who can play croquet, and cheat with all the suavity and grace for which the sex is everywhere noted.

There are still a few full-bloods here who cling to many of the old Indian customs, and their manner of courtship is simplicity itself, and is carried on as follows: The young "buck" who begathers a few chips or twigs of wood and gently shies them one by one toward the object of his affection, and if the fusilade is returned he can consider his suit as won. The marriage ceremony consists in inviting a few friends to witness the dispensable to all well-regulated housemutual agreement, a few refreshments are served, and the ceremonies are over. Your correspondent has not as yet commenced throwing any chips, and the probabilities are there will being occasion or such a movement if any of the modern

On a high and triangular point of land near the junction of the Canadian and Arkansas rivers is a small plateau, the entrance being nearly or quite inaccessible excepting by a narrow approach from the westward, and as near like the rendezvous of "ye dime-novel hero" as can be imagined, lives the woman Belle Star, who, with her male companions are well known in this locality. She is said to have been at one time the wife of one of the Youngers. Belle is described as a dashing brunette, haudsome, adventur-ous, and a bold horsewoman, with a wonderful serve and as sure a shot as any man in the neighborhood. That she is feared in this com-munity is evident from the fact that she often makes her appearance in town with her babies, as she jocularly terms a brace of lvory-handled forty-fives, buckled around her walst, and no one has as yet telt disposed to ask her to surrender her

Within a short time two deputy marshals and one citizen have been made to bite the dust in this vicinity, the citizen being robbed of 8500 in cash, which he had with him. Two Victims of Rattlesnake Bites-Crops to Fine Condition

Correspondence of the Gazette MENARDVILLE, TEX., May 20 .- Two deaths took place in this vicinity te-day from the bites of rattlesnakes. One of the cictims was a little three-year-old giri, the daughter of Mr. James Alexander of this place. When this unfortunste occurrence happened the child, in company with her larger sister, was playing around the door steps of their father's house, and it seems that the larger girl in running by near whore the snake was concealed under the door step had aroused the snake, and as the little girl that was running after her sister ran by the end of the steps, the snake struck at her, inflicting a wound on the ankle. SPURGEON ON VERBOSITY.

Endeavor with all your might to avoid verbosity. Say as much as you can in a few words. If you can say a thing well than this by never saying them at all. Wordiness is the disease which comes of fluency. Good speakers have most cause to dread it. After listening to a very good brother the other day I could not road, and then the other necessities to making this a good country to live in will naturally follow.
